Lékařská první pomoc v urgentních stavech
Summary
The book is based on the content and requirements of Medical First Aid courses, which are part of the mandatory pre-attestation training, but it will also be used in practice by doctors not working in the routine emergency situations, medical students and non-medical health professionals. Many studies have shown that the lay public automatically sees every medical and paramedical worker in the medical field as fully competent in dealing with serious medical conditions, regardless of his expertise, and also for these cases the book was written.
The publication is conceived as an overview of situations that are life-threatening or leading to serious health threats. In addition to instructions for performing resuscitation, the content and serious conditions are divided, primarily not by the final diagnoses, but by the main problems with which the physician may be confronted. Examples include airways obstruction, unconsciousness, convulsions, traumas, dyspnoea, chest pain and acute coronary and vascular events, acute abdomen, obstetric and gynecologic emergencies, external causes of tissue damage (burns, hyperthermia, frostbite, hypothermia, drowning, ionizing radiation, etc.); other sudden conditions in allergology, infectology, neurology, ophthalmology, ENT, pediatrics, psychiatry, dentistry and urology. Indicatively, the activity during mass disaster, the provision of psychological intervention and the communication of bad news are mentioned.
